The saga of the Society's new website continues with notice of yet another delay to its launch. We were promised the new site for early December 2018 then it was mid-January 2019 and now it is supposed to be mid-March 2019.

Do these delays add additional cost to the original budget?

Apart from providing information about the governance and management of the RSDCS, the essential purpose of the website is to provide visitors (who'll have varying reasons for landing on the site) with up-to-date and relevant information on dances; classes; day, summer and winter schools; country dancing festivals, competitions and holidays. Further, the site must be intuitively navigable. Even a first-timer should be able to arrive on the website and know exactly where they can find the information they want and need without being confused. The prospect of "online tutorial videos and helpful walkthroughs to get us accustomed to the new site", as promised in the recent e-Newsletter, sounds rather ominous. However, the site launch is now promised to take place within days.....

The MiniCrib Team are aware that a number of websites "re-publish" MiniCrib recaps and we are very happy that this should continue as a valuable service to the Scottish Country Dance community. However, we wish to make it clear that the MiniCrib Team have no direct input to, or control over, any such websites and hence the MiniCrib Team cannot accept responsibility for the accuracy of recaps from websites other than www.minicrib.org.uk We advise that MiniCrib users check the MiniCrib website from time to time and always download and use the latest version.

Remember - MiniCrib is free, so why use an out of date version?
